

SUPPORTING CAST

Antoine Lavoisier (Hugo Becker) gives instructions for a respiration experiment as four colleagues (from left, David Santori, Daniel Whelton, Ethan Corbin and Yan Tual) listen and Marie Anne Lavoisier (Ava Deluca-Verley) takes notes.

Hugo Becker and Ava Deluca-Verley as Antoine and Marie Anne Lavoisier, flanked by (from left) Daniel Whelton, Yan Tual, Ethan Corbin and David Santori as colleagues Claude Berthollet, Antoine Fourcroy, Armand Seguin and Lavoisier's lab assistant.

Antoine Lavoisier (Hugo Becker) and colleagues (Federico Muchnik, Davis Robinson and Ronald Guttman) ridicule the antiquated language of chemistry.

Poets Robert Southey (Erik Bloomquist) and Samuel Taylor Coleridge (James Hayward) and publisher Joseph Cottle (Simon Green) listen raptly to Humphry Davy.

John Davy (Luke David Young) and Edmund Davy (Andrew Justin Smith) marvel at the explosion when Humphry Davy (Matthew Amendt) puts potassium in water.

André-Louis Debièrre (Justin Blanchard) gives a chemistry tip to Marie Curie (Juliet Rylance), whose training is in physics.

Lucas Dixon, Anthony Marble and John Curless as Charles G. Darwin, Harry Moseley and Ernest Rutherford.

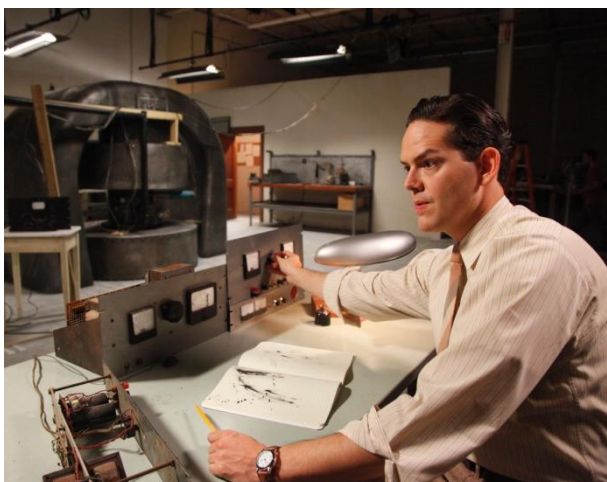

Emilio Segrè (Dennis Wise), Arthur Wahl (Paul Davis Lyons), Glenn Seaborg (Nick Gehlfuss) and Joe Kennedy (Joseph Garland) learn that plutonium can be used in a bomb.

Aleksandr Inostrantsev (Gene Ravvin) consoles Dmitri Mendeleev (Michael Aronov), who has come to an impasse in his efforts to create the Periodic Table.

Phil Abelson (John Michael Marrs) mans the Berkeley cyclotron just before learning that German scientists have split the uranium atom.

Physicist Ed McMillan (Ian Lyons) in front of the Berkeley cyclotron he will use to create the first transuranic element: neptunium.

Don Bagley as alchemist Hennig Brandt.

Ethan Scholes as Joseph Priestley's son.

Burriss Cunningham (Vasilios Asimakos) and Glenn Seaborg (Nick Gehlfuss) see plutonium for the first time.

Marshall Berenson as Joao Jacinto de Magellan, the “Portuguese spy” who tips off Lavoisier about Priestley’s soda water.

Martin Raymer as spectroscopist Eugène-Anatole Demarçay, who finds radium’s spectral line for the Curies.

Catherine Walleck as Eve Curie.

Guy Strauss as Pierre Joseph Macquer.

Mark Mauriello as Humphry Davy’s assistant, Robert Kinglake.

Jane Becker as Dmitri Mendeleev’s housekeeper.

Mark Nelson as physicist Robert Millikan.

Peter Stray as physicist Luis Alvarez.